

May 3, 2006

Who's Got Sauce?

She never really understood you.

Which is why you knew Mom would raise the roof when you shaved your head to protest Spot's caged living conditions. But freaking out over a few extra sweets before dinner? That was way harsh. Even for her.

Maybe it's time you sought comfort in the loving arms of Somebody's Mother's chocolate sauce. Made by Houston's Lynn Lasher (and based on a beloved family recipe), the addictive concoction has no preservatives and no fancy (read: unnecessary) additives. Every jar is filled with plain old chocolate.

And because this Texas matriarch is more understanding than yours, she won't mind if you eat her creation as a warm, creamy fondue; a room-temperature fruit dip; or a chilled snack right out of the jar.

No matter how you decide to devour it, the sauce will satisfy the strongest of sugar cravings.

It might even be good enough for your own mother.

Available online at somebodysmothers.com.

DailyCandy is strictly editorial. There is no pay for play.